Cleaver's Life
In Extreme Danger

COMPTON, Calif. (AP) — The life of Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver "is in extreme danger" in Algeria where he has been living in exile the past three years, his wife says.

Cleaver, a fugitive from justice in California, has received an increasing number of death threats in the last six months, Kathleen Cleaver told a news conference Saturday.

She said she couldn't specify who would plot to assassinate Cleaver.

She was unsure what the Panthers next move would be, she said. Mrs. Cleaver added that her husband would like to legally return to the United States, but declined to say what plans are being made.
